

New Resource for finding graduate programs for Phi U Fellowships

By Duane Whitbeck, Past Chair, Phi Upsilon Omicron Educational Foundation

Phi Upsilon Omicron offers Fellowships for graduate students seeking masters and doctoral degrees in Family and Consumer Sciences career areas. Each year there are a limited number of applicants for these fellowships which range from $750.00 - $1,500.00. Because students often change universities between their undergraduate and graduate work it often happens that member of Phi U forget about this financial resource for which they might qualify.

The Phi U Educational Foundation has created a website to assist students in finding graduate programs that would likely qualify. The criteria are that the program must be substantially made up of Family and Consumer Sciences related coursework. (This has been determined to mean that 30% of the coursework must be within a Family and Consumer Sciences field.) Courses in Interior Design, Fashion, Early Childhood, Family and Human Development, Nutrition, Aging, etc. will most likely fit the requirements. By going to <http://goo.gl/maps/s9C1C> you will find a Google map that has identified nearly every program that meets these requirements. It also can be used when looking for a program within a specific geographical area.

Other useful internet search sites for programs include:

www.cic.net/libraries/diversity/gradschoolguide.sflb, www.gradschools.com/,

www.phds.org/

To find out more information about Fellowships, Scholarships and Awards, go to the Phi U webpage at <http://www.phiu.org/>